for before next spring. This authority said:

"Russia is nearly isolated from western Europe. The Arctic is practically closed, thus locking the harbor of Archangel for many months. German strategy undoubtedly had this situation in mind when the attack against Riga and Dvinsk was launched. From those points it is believed that the German forces, with the coöperation of naval units in the Baltic, will make a 'drive against Petrograd.

"It had been believed that the Pskov line would hold the Germans in cheek, as it is naturally very strong, but unless there should be a radical reorganization of the Russian army and a great improvement in its fighting spirit and efficiency, it is likely that the German nonslaught. The reason that Germany has not already attempted to penetrate this line and make a campaign against Petrograd probably is due to the closeness of winter, and secondly, to the preparations for the descent upon Italy.

chief witnesses against Count James Minotto, son-in-law of Louis F. Swift, the millionaire packer of Chicago, told what she knew of the suspected German agent on her return from Chicago last night.

Mrs. Eldridge, who met the count while travelling with her husband in South America in 1915, said that she was visiting relatives in Chicago when she learned of Minotto's arrest. She told friends what she knew of him, and shortly after found herself served with a subpoena.

Mrs. Eldridge said she testified that frequently during conversation with the count he gave utterance to the most pronounced pro-German sympathies.
She said he was constantly in the company of Germans, and was a frequent visitor to Count Luxburg, the head of the German spy system in South America, while he was in Buenos Ayres.
She and her husband were on the same stearer when they went from Buenos Ayres to Rio de Janeiro. At Rio de Janeiro, she said, his baggage was searched by Brazilian Secret Service agents at the request of Sir Reginald Tower, the British Ambassador.
